

Problems of mountain areas in Georgia and international experience

Giorgi Kapanadze

e-mail: giokap100@gmail.com

Department of Geography, Faculty of Exact and Natural Sciences, Ivane Javakhishvili Tbilisi State University
Chavchavadze Ave #3, Tbilisi, 0179, Georgia

Forms of use in mountain areas and associated problems are directly related to the level of development of the country. If mountain regions in developed countries are "distinguished" by economic backwardness, with social tensions and high rates of migration, it's the opposite case in developing countries. The mountain regions have already become tourist centers and are characterized by high standard of living.

The mountain regions have a special place in structural policy of every country, so it is interesting to see the approaches of developed and developing countries to mountainous areas.

The report discusses problems in mountain areas according to "the strategy of Georgia's Highland Settlement", The aim has to formulate a strategic vision for inclusive and sustainable development of Georgian regions. The existing strategic document has compared to the development strategy of other highlands in the world. The report also discusses the "mountain law" of Georgia, which has compared to the "mountain law" of the developing countries.